

6.1. Vocabulary (Text from "Three Men in a Boat" by Jerome K. Jerome)

We had the idea in the evening that we should get up early in the morning, jump into the river and enjoy a long delicious swim. Now the morning had come, and the idea seemed less tempting. "Well, who's going to be first in?" said Harris at last. There was no rush to go first. I decided just to throw some water over myself; so I climbed along the branch of a tree over the water. It was bitterly cold. The wind cut like a knife. I thought I would not throw the water over myself after all. I would go back into the boat and dress; and as I turned to do so, the branch broke and I fell into the Thames. "Look! He's gone in." I heard Harris say. "Is it all right?" called George. "Lovely." I shouted back. "You are silly not to come in. Why won't you try it?" But I could not persuade them.
